Good Styles In Furniture.

When there is so much artistic furniture made nowadays and the prices are so reasonable, there is no sense in having ugly things in your house. A little taste in selecting furniture suitable to your rooms makes all the difference in the appearance of your house. You can hardly go astray here, for all our styles are good, no matter what prices the articles are marked at. If anything, we are a little more particular in the selection of designs of medium-priced furniture than we are on higher-priced goods, and the consequence is that many of our things really look much more expensive than they are.

The amount of business we are doing in our Carpet Department shows that we have also been very successful in getting good patterns in floor coverings.

Habibullah. From the London Chronicle.

The peaceful accession of Habibullah to the throne of Afghanistan, and the complacent attitude of his half-brothers and the Afghan sirdars, tides us safely over the first and in some respects the most dangerous step in Afghan succession. Other steps, however, still remain, and for some time to come the inner politics of that state must remain a matter of keen solicitude in the high places of India. As we re-marked yesterday, a rising sooner or later against his authority is as inevitable in Afghanistan as it would be improbable elsewhere, and it is then that the mettle of the where, and it is then that the mettle of the new ameer will be tested. He has shown that he can rule well and wisely in time of that he can rule well and wisely in time of peace, and that when the way to power is made straight for him he can enter in. He has still to show that he can hold his inheritance against all comers; and in the East dagger and poison play as large a part as open insurrection. Habibullah is already bound to England by predilection and self-interest, and the stronger and more masterful he proves himself the better it will be for us. The Silk Crop.

From Japan and America. The failure or shortage of the silk crop The fallure or shortage of the silk crop in other countries has unexpectedly given a great stimulus to the silk industry here. The price of silk has jumped up 1,000 yen the bale. Coupled with this comes the announcement of the government that its investigation into the possibility of improving silk manufacture here has been entirely satisfactory. The prospects for the silk culture and manufacture are, therefore, very bright.

teresting Personal Notes.

Bessie Adelia McChesney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Day McChesney, to Mr. Johnson Ricker Morgan of Cumberland, Md., was witnessed by a large concourse of their friends. The platform all about the pulpit was set with palms and tall clusters of white chrysanthemums, and bunches of this latter flower, in pink and white, marked the family pews. The ushers were Messrs. Randolph Milholland, Morris Clarke and Marshall Gillette of Cumberland, Mr. Walton Marshall of New York, Mr. Douglas Simms and Mr. A. G. McChesney of this city. The bride's only attendant was Miss Agnes McChesney, who was stylishly gowned in tucked pink liberty satin and wore a hat of black tulle and feathers. Her flowers were enormous chrysanthemums in pale pink, tied with long streamers of pink gauze. The bride came in with her father and looked exceedingly attractive in her trained dress of white satin and tulle vell held by a small cluster of lilies of the val-ley. Her bouquet was of the same flowers. Rev. Dr. Radcliffe performed the ceremony and the choir quartet sang the wedding marches and anthems. Mr. and Mrs. Mc-Chesney afterward entertained the bridal party and a few personal friends of the couple at a wedding breakfast prior to the departure of Mr. and Mrs. Morgan for their honeymoon jaunt.

Postal Currency. To the Editor of The Evening Star:

In sending through the mails sums under $5 the money order system has been found troublesome and also somewhat too expensive in proportion to the amount involved. Further objections are that identification is always necessary and that money order business cannot be transacted at all post offices. Identification is sometimes impossible and is nearly always inconvenient. The payee hesitates to trouble a friend to accompany him to the post office, and when that is done he is placed under obligations and must sometimes incur expense, such as car fare, &c. David L. Gitt advocates a postal currency in denominations under one dollar, redeemable in cash or stamps at any post office. In his report for the fiscal year 1900 Auditor Henry A. Castle describes a proposed postal currency which would to a certain extent take the place of money orders and at the same time not increase the auditing expenses of the postal

The proposed currency is to be like ordi-nary money; but the holder will have the privilege of converting it into a govern-ment check by writing the name of a payee on a blank line provided. To cover expense of handling, a postage stamp is to be affixed to each note. These notes being handled as money, accounting would be unnecessary. As two or more notes would frequently have to be used to make up the correct amount, the charge on each note should not exceed one cent; otherwise the cost might be greater than the expense of buying a money order. In addition to the practical suggestions made by Auditor Castle, I should say that the postal currency should be in such form as to permit the postmaster to waive identification of the payer at the option of the sender when

THE WORLD OF SOCIETY the sender makes a request to that effect on the note itself. With such a system funds could always be easily sent through the mails, thus avoiding the transmittal of coins and avoidavoiding the transmittal of coins and avoid-ing the use of postage stamps as currency. When identification is waived the signature of the payee would still be necessary, and there would be very few people indeed, even among the fraternity of crooks, who would risk the penalty of forgery for the small amount of one of these notes. Convenience of collection could not always be combined with perfect safety, but the risk would be very slight. Under the peculiar circumstances of each case the sender could waive identification or not, as might seem best all things considered.
